Preface

G.D.H. Cole was born on 25 September 1889 and died on 14 January 1959. He married Margaret Postgate in August 1918. Cole came to prominence in the years shortly before the First World War. Along with S.G. Hobson and A.P. Orage, he was a leading theorist of that form of industrial democracy known as guild socialism and was subsequently prominent in the short-lived guild socialism movement. For the next half century, he was active as an influential academic, leading Fabian, and guiding light of several left-wing groups. Above all, he was a political thinker, whose work in the last decade of his life was described by Richard Crossman as “still the most creative ... in the Labour movement”.

Cole was made a Faculty Fellow of Nuffield College in 1939, a Professorial Fellow of the College in 1944 and was elected to a Research Fellowship in 1957. The College library holds not only his papers but the papers of his wife, Dame Margaret Cole, and of the Nuffield College Social Reconstruction Survey which he directed.

A

Publications, with some unpublished matter

G.D.H. Cole was a prolific writer, the author of over a hundred books and thousands of articles, many of them unsigned pieces for the New statesman. In this collection of his papers, his articles are arranged thematically: materials relating to books are arranged in chronological order, beginning with the seminal guild socialist work The world of labour (1913).

The singing of songs was a regular event whenever the young Cole and his guild socialist colleagues met. Cole displayed a facility for writing satirical verse, a talent which he employed frequently after 1920; from that date a revue was produced for every summer school attended by the Coles. The most significant of the pieces, The striker stricken, was written in the aftermath of the General Strike and, reputedly, in the space of 48 hours. It was staged by the Oxford University Labour Club in autumn 1926 and afterwards toured the Durham coal fields and elsewhere.

Personal, biographical

According to Margaret Cole in the preface to her biography of her husband, G.D.H. Cole considered himself to be ‘of no interest whatsoever’ as an individual. It was this reasoning which persuaded him to destroy virtually all his personal correspondence. Fortunately letters written to him by his father and his father-in-law, J.P. Postgate, survive and are in this section of the collection. Letters written to Cole by his wife can be found in the Margaret Cole papers.

Cole went up to Balliol College Oxford as an exhibitor in 1908. From 1912 until 1919 he was a Prize Fellow at Magdalen College. Papers from this period illustrate Cole’s early tastes in literature and the development of his political ideas. The pocket diaries used by Cole are a record of some of his appointments and meetings in the period 1925–1955.

Political activities

G.D.H. Cole was involved in a myriad of political activities during his life. His connection with the Fabian Society began at Oxford and continued until his death. Cole was particularly adept at organising left-wing groups and research bodies. Two such were the Society for Socialist Inquiry and Propaganda, which came to an end in 1932, and the New Fabian Research Bureau. The latter produced much valuable research and its amalgamation with the Fabian Society resulted in a revitalised Society in which Cole played a leading role.

During the Second World War, Cole initiated the formation of the Social Security League. This organisation, founded in the aftermath of the Beveridge Report, had as its aim the creation of a comprehensive welfare system. Late in his life, Cole wrote two articles for the New statesman under the title “The future of socialism”. His argument, that socialism was in danger of losing its drive and rigour, resulted in the creation of the short-lived International Society for Socialist Studies.

Cole was an active participant in the affairs of the Labour Party. Shortly after the First World War, Arthur Henderson installed him as secretary to the advisory committees of the party. For a while he was the prospective parliamentary candidate for King’s Norton (Birmingham) and in 1945 he stood unsuccessfully for one of the parliamentary seats of Oxford University. Before the Second World War, the issue of a popular front against fascism divided the Labour Party and Cole’s strong opinions on this subject show themselves in the papers in the collection.

Education

G.D.H. Cole was a Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, from 1912 to 1919. Throughout the First World War, he taught at evening classes and in 1921 was appointed director of tutorial classes at the University of London. Although he resigned from this post in 1925, he continued to be involved with adult education and with the Workers' Educational Association in particular. In 1926 he tried, unsuccessfully, to persuade the Trades Union Congress to establish a labour college at Easton Lodge.

Cole's career at Oxford resumed in 1925 on his appointment as University Reader in Economics and Fellow of University College. In June 1939 he was appointed to a faculty fellowship at Nuffield College; five years later he became Chichele Professor of Social and Political Theory and a Fellow of All Souls College.

In the late 1940s Cole was an enthusiastic participant in the Common Ground project, which aimed to produce film strips and booklets for use in schools. His own collection of illustrations was utilised for this end. The UNESCO seminar on workers' education at Château de la Brévière took place under Cole's direction in 1952. He went on to become chairman of the UNESCO consultative committee, a post from which he resigned in 1956.

Government committees

The Economic Advisory Committee, of which Cole was a member, was set up under the second Labour government to advise the Prime Minister, Ramsay MacDonald. During the same period, Cole also gave evidence to the Ministry of Health Departmental Committee on the Relief of the Casual Poor and to the Royal Commission on Unemployment.

In June 1940 the Minister of Labour, Ernest Bevin, commissioned Sir William Beveridge to prepare a survey of available labour in Britain. Beveridge in turn entrusted the task to Cole, who quickly established a network of investigators across the country. The evidence collected by them was used for a report by the Man-Power Requirements Committee on the wartime labour situation. Later in the war, Cole was persuaded by R.A. Butler to serve on the Committee on Public Schools. Some correspondence between R.H. Tawney and Cole, which was prompted by the Committee's work, can be found in the papers of the Nuffield College Social Reconstruction Survey, file A2/286.

Bibliographical and other papers

H.P. Smith, an old guild socialist colleague of G.D.H. Cole, began a bibliography of the latter's writings but he had not completed this by the time of his death in 1967.

Cole compiled notes on a number of labour and radical figures. After his death these were transferred to the University of Hull where they formed the basis of the Dictionary of labour biography, the first volume of which was published in 1972.

The rest of this section demonstrates Cole's interest in radicalism, 'pictorial statistics', and a range of other socio-political topics.

Conspectus

The conspectus, on pages 85–101, is for guidance only and should not be regarded as giving accurate cross references. It is best used in conjunction with the previous list, compiled in 1960 (c.). The old reference numbers were based on shelf locations in the Library basement, probably Basement 4 formerly known as Basement 3. The second element refers to the bay and the third refers to the shelf. Within each shelf, boxes were not given unique numbers and the numbering of files was not carried out consistently. It is therefore essential to look at both the ‘old reference number’ and the ‘description of record’ to identify old references. To facilitate this, the conspectus also gives the relevant page numbers from the 1960 list.
